ABSTRACT

This color-coded guide/catalog was prepared as a resource for adult educators through a Montana project that evaluated computer software for teaching basic skills to adults. The guide is divided into three parts. Part I consists of the results of the assessment and evaluation of 119 pieces of software currently being used at 16 adult basic education sites in the state. Evaluations are organized according to the following subject matter areas: language arts, reading, mathematics, science, social studies, business/office skills, and other. For each software title the following are indicated: appropriate level, hardware, subject/skill area, publisher, cost, borrowing policy, ratings, instructional purposes, program description, and other comments. Part II of the notebook consists of the data obtained on the six pieces of software purchased and evaluated through the Center for Community Education at Montana State University. Titles are (1) Basic Math Competency Skill Building; (2) LEA 1 Functional Literacy Using Whole Language; (3) Grammar and Writing, a Language Arts Experience; (4) Reading and Thinking I-IV; (5) Crossword Magic; and (6) Compu-Read. This software is available for adult educators in Montana to borrow. Part III contains a listing of other resources that might be helpful to adult educators making decisions about computer software. Included are lists of other evaluation references, several pertinent publications, and a list of software publishers/distributors. (KC)

INTRODUCTION

The overall purpose of this project was to develop a resource for adult educators, specifically those involved in adult basic education, which would assist in the selection of computer software for use in basic skills instruction. This was accomplished in three phases. First, a comprehensive assessment and evaluation of software currently being used at various ABE sites in Montana was undertaken. The second phase was to purchase and evaluate a limited amount of "new" software to fill in some of the gaps identified as a result of the assessment. The identification of other resources that might be of assistance in the selection of computer software constituted the third phase. The end result was the notebook titled Computer Software for Teaching Basic Skills to Adults, an Evaluation.

The notebook is divided into three parts. Part I consists of the results of the assessment and evaluation of the software currently being used at various ABE sites in the state. Of the twenty-four (24) sites assessed, sixteen (16) reported that they were using computer assisted instructions and each of these sites provided an evaluation of the various pieces of software being used. Information was gathered on a total of 119 pieces of software with most being utilized in the areas of language arts and math.

This information is organized in the notebook according to subject matter areas each of which is color coded as follows:

Language Arts (buff)
Reading (blue)
Math (yellow)
Science (white)
Social Studies (green)
Business/Office Skills (grey)
Other (pink)

Where more than one subject matter area was identified, the evaluation data is presented in the notebook under the first area identified.

Part II of the notebook consists of the data obtained on the six pieces of software purchased and evaluated through the Center for Community Education/LLRN at Montana State University. The decision to purchase these specific pieces of software were based on two factors: 1) not currently being used at any of the participating ABE sites; and 2) existing evaluation data on the usefulness of the software with adult learners. This software was evaluated by one of two graduate students who are enrolled in the adult/community education program at Montana State University.

The software identified in Part II, may be borrowed for preview by adult educators in Montana. The length of time each piece may be previewed is two (2) weeks. Interested individuals should contact the Center for Community Education/LLRN at 250 Reid, Montana State University, Bozeman, MT 59717. Sites are responsible for the cost of return postage and insuring the software according to value (cost) listed on the evaluation form.

To complete the notebook, Part III contains a listing of other resources which might be helpful to the adult educators attempting to make decisions about computer software. Included are lists of other evaluation references, several pertinent publications and a list of software publishers/distributors.

Following the introduction is a suggested list of questions that an individual might ask prior to purchasing computer software for use with adult learners. It is hoped that the contents of this notebook will assist in finding answers to some of these questions.

This project was funded in part by a grant from the Office of Public Instruction, Nancy Keenan, State Superintendent and Bob Ruthemeyer, Adult Education Specialist, Helena, MT, 59620. Monies were from Section 353 of the Adult Education Act.

SOFTWARE EVALUATION QUESTIONS

Curriculum Decisions:

*How will the software fit into the existing curriculum?
*For which grade levels or ability levels is the program intended?
*What is the specific content of the program? Is it accurate and free of sterotypes? Is it in harmony with what is being presented through other media within the curriculum plan? Can the content be genralized and applied beyond the computer?
*What are the instructional objectives? Do these correlate with the established curriculum?
*Has the program been classroom tested with a sample population similar to those in your program?
*What instructional materials are available to support the program?
*In what way does the program provide for the evaluation of the learner's progress?
*Is the content or skill best presented by the computer?

Reading Instruction Considerations:

*Is the software compatible with defined objectives, skills and concepts being taught?
*Is the drill in a meaningful context rather than in isolation?
*Does it provide for comprehension at all levels?
*Does it allow teachers to substitute vocabulary tests and other data?
*Does it give introductions and instructions at an easy readability?
*Does it make appropriate and creative use of graphics?
*Does it avoid excessive typing of responses?
*Does it use consistent input patterns?
*Does it give a special response for a correct answer the first time?
*Does it give the correct answer after 2 or 3 tries?
*Does it have a subroutine for misspelled correct answers?
*Does it provide a useful summary of student performance?

Technical Considerations:

*What kind of hardware is required to run the program?
*How much memory?
*On what media has the program been stored?
*What peripherals are needed?
*In what language is the program written?
*What is the cost?
*Is the program locked up or listable so it can be modified?
*What is the policy for multiple copies?
*What is the cost of support materials?
*How much time does it take to train teachers and students?

*Is the program easy to run?
*Does the program make provision for appropriate error trapping?
*Does the teacher have the facility to run the program?
*Is the program reliable?
*Will the publisher allow you to try it before you purchase?

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This project could not have been completed without the time and effort of many individuals. A special thanks goes to all Adult Basic Education directors and teachers in Montana who completed the various evaluation forms. Without their cooperation, this project would not have been successful.

Sue Elliot, graduate assistant with the Center for Community Education/LLRN, was responsible for mailing the assessment and evaluation forms, tracking the returns, and tabulating the data. She also spent countless hours entering the evaluation data into the computer. Sue's tireless work is greatly appreciated.

Three other individuals also need to be acknowledged for their help with this project. David Marvel, faculty member at MSU, helped design the format for entering the evaluation data into the computer and provided advice as to potential "new" software to purchase. Lynn Farris, Flathead Valley Community College, and Mat Barreiro, graduate assistant with the Center for Community Education/LLRN, each helped evaluate the "new" software. Our thanks to all three.

ADDITIONAL RESOURCES

RESOURCES

There are many resources to assist the adult educator in the selection of computer software for use with adult learners. The following lists are not intended to be all inclusive but should serve as a PLACE TO START for the user of this notebook. The list of software catalogs available from publishers is fairly extensive but one should be cautioned that some may no longer be in existence or may have had address changes. Every effort has, however, been made to provide the latest information available.
